PORTOFINO

————— For many decades now, the former fishing village of Portofino on the Gulf of Tigullio near Genoa, Italy, has epitomized the laid-back way of life of southern Europe. The classically elegant Portofino watch family is a subtle reflection of this lifestyle. The history of the Portofino watch family began in the late 1970s. Back then, IWC noted a steady demand for timeless, classic models. The elegant IWC Lépine pocket watch, Reference 5201, served as the basis for the new watch collection: the dial was rotated through 90 degrees and the movement was equipped with a moon phase display. And that was it: the new “pocket-watch-style wrist-watch” Reference 5251, which was unveiled in 1984, went by the name “Portofino”. Since then, the Portofino collection has been one of IWC’s most successful watch families – an expression of understatement and good taste.

Over the past 30 years, the Portofino watch family has welcomed a stream of new timepieces and complications. However different they are from each other, they all perfectly reflect the heart and soul of this watch collection. The Portofino range includes understated models with cases measuring 37 millimetres in diameter and classic models with a simple moon phase display as well as watches with big complications. The Portofino Automatic 37 and Portofino Automatic Moon Phase 37, for instance, are a celebration of subtle luxury with diamonds on the bezel or dial. The Portofino Hand-Wound Tourbillon Rétrograde, with its tourbillon at “6 o’clock” and beautiful see-through back cover, as well as the Portofino Hand-Wound Monopusher, with its single-push-button chronograph movement, are perfect demonstrations of the fine watchmaking expertise found in this watch family. But it is the classically elegant Portofino Automatic, with its three hands and 40-millimetre diameter, that has established itself as the most popular and best-known watch within the Portofino watch family since its launch in the 1990s.
